MESSAGE FROM THE BASE COMMANDER

On behalf of the base military and civilian personnel I would like to welcome you to Cornwallis. We have one of the most important roles in the Canadian Forces: to train recruits. It is only through the support of individuals, both military and civilian and their families, who work together as a team, which ensures that our mission is completed successfully.

You will find the recreational facilities and support agencies are excellent and I encourage you to take full advantage of them. The enjoyment of a posting here depends on the amount of effort and participation you and your family partake in the life of the Cornwallis community.

A hearty welcome to you all.

MESSAGE DU COMMANDANT DE LA BASE

De la part du personnel militaire et civil de la Base, je vous souhaite la bienvenue à Cornwallis. Nous avons un des rôles les plus importants des Forces Canadiennes: entraîner les recrues. Le succès de cette mission n'est possible qu'avec le support et le travail d'équipe de tous, les militaires et les employés civils et leur famille.

Vous trouverez les installations récréatives et les organismes de support excellents et vous encourage à en profiter pleinement. Le plaisir et la satisfaction que vous retirerez de votre affectation dépendra de l'effort et la participation que vous et votre famille mettez dans la vie communautaire de Cornwallis.

Un sincère bienvenue à tous.

L.J. Noiles
Colonel
Commandant de la base

HISTORY OF CORNWALLIS

Situated on the beautiful shores of the historical Annapolis Basin, Canadian Forces Base Cornwallis, home of Canadian Forces Recruit School, is the latest in a succession of military installations that have occupied this area for almost four hundred years. The first fortified position occupied was on the opposite side of the basin at Port Royal, founded in 1605 by Champlain. A map drawn in 1609 shows a small chapel where Cornwallis now stands, the first record of any development of the site.

The 150 years following Champlain's visit saw the area change hands many times in the struggle between France and England for empire in North America. The major military base during this period was at Annapolis Royal where Fort Anne remains as a historic museum. Soon after consolidating her hold on North America, England was faced with revolt in the colonies and Fort Anne served as a staging area for troops heading for or returning from combat duty. It was in the "Loyalist" exodus from the newly independent United States of America that significant development was made at the location of the present day military training base.

This area, including most of the present village of Clementsport, was part of a Loyalist grant of land to Captain Douwe Ditmars of Long Island, New York, 1783. The house he erected in Clementsport is still in use and the old St. Edward's Church, for which Captain Ditmars donated the land, is now a museum although church services are still held there on occasion.

The Cornwallis site was cleared and later farmed by John Ditmars, grandson of the grantee, and from him the estate passed to Colonel Hallet Ray who represented the area as a member of parliament. Colonel Ray built the house that has now become the Base Commander's residence and subsequently sold the estate to Albert Morton. In the early 1930's, Mr. Morton sold out to E.P. Morse, a wealthy retired businessman who had ambitious plans for developing the area. The present West gate was built as the entrance to the North side of his property and the present Officers' Mess which was not quite completed was to serve as his residence. Unfortunately, Mr. Morse died suddenly and the property was subsequently purchased by the Department of National Defence as a site for a Naval training establishment, HMCS Cornwallis, which had recently come into existence.

Base commissioned

Cornwallis had been commissioned at Halifax on May 1, 1942 as a sub-command responsible for training. It comprised numerous scattered schools, offices and quarters. With the Navy's operational role in the Halifax area rapidly expanding and limited space available it was already obvious that training would have to be located elsewhere. Moving with the speed that characterizes war-time operations, the site at Deep Brook was selected, purchased and by the end of June 1942 construction was underway. On April 14, 1943, the official transfer from Halifax to Cornwallis took place. The final cost of construction excluding equipment, was about $9,000,000.

In a few months, the once quiet estate had become the largest new entry training base in the British Commonwealth and easily the largest town in the area with a peak population in excess of 11,000 personnel including staff and trainees. Thousands of young Canadian men and women received their introduction to military life here and it is no uncommon sight now on a summer day to have a grey-haired traveller stop at the gate and request permission to walk again along the roads and beside the buildings so nostalgically remembered.

At the end of the war in 1945, the Base became a Discharge Transit Centre, returning naval personnel to civilian life, so that for many of them HMCS Cornwallis represented both their first and last connections with the Navy. By 1946 the transition had been completed and on February 28, less than four years after initial construction began, the Base was declared surplus, paid off by the Navy and turned over to War Assets Corporation for disposal. The only facility that remained in use

HISTORIQUE DE CORNWALLIS

Située sur les bords du magnifique bassin de l'Annapolis, la BFC Cornwallis qui abrite l'École des recrues des Forces canadiennes est le dernier d'une série d'établissements militaires qui se sont succédés à cet endroit pendant près de 400 ans. Le premier poste fortifié à avoir été occupé se trouvait de l'autre côté du bassin, à Port-Royal, fondé par Champlain en 1605. Sur une carte tirée en 1609, on peut voir une petite chapelle à l'endroit qu'occupe maintenant Cornwallis. Il s'agit du plus ancien document témoignant de l'aménagement de l'endroit.

Au cours des 150 ans qui ont suivi la visite de Champlain, cette région a changé de mains nombre de fois, la France et l'Angleterre voulant toutes deux étendre leur empire à l'Amérique du Nord. La principale base militaire pendant cette période fut établie à Annapolis Royal où le Fort Anne est aujourd'hui un musée historique. Tout juste après avoir assuré son emprise sur l'Amérique du Nord, l'Angleterre se trouva aux prises avec la révolte des colonies et Fort Anne servit de zone d'étape aux troupes qui se rendaient au combat ou en revenaient. C'est lors de l'exode des "Loyalistes" qui fuyaient les États-Unis d'Amérique, récemment devenus indépendants, que l'endroit qu'occupe actuellement la base d'instruction militaire a pris son essor.

L'endroit, qui comprenait presque tout le village actuel de Clementsport, faisait partie des terres données au loyaliste Douwe Ditmars, capitaine de Long Island (New York) en 1783. La maison qu'il a construite à Clementsport est encore habitée et la vieille église St. Edward, érigée sur un terrain donné par le capitaine Ditmars, sert maintenant de musée bien que des services religieux soient encore célébrés à l'occasion.

Le site de Cornwallis fut ensuite défriché et cultivé par John Ditmars, petit-fils du capitaine, qui vendit son bien au colonel Hallet Ray qui fut député de la région. Le colonel Ray fit construire la maison qui sert maintenant de résidence au commandant de la base. Il vendit plus tard la propriété à Albert Morton. Au début des années 1930, M. Morton la vendit à son tour à E.P. Morse, riche homme d'affaires à la retraite, qui nourrissait pour l'endroit d'ambitieux projets d'aménagement. L'actuelle barrière ouest était l'entrée nord de sa propriété et sa résidence, dont la construction n'était pas complètement achevée à l'époque, sert maintenant de mess des officiers. Malheureusement, M. Morse mourut subitement et la propriété fut ensuite achetée par le ministère de la Défense nationale qui y installa le centre d'instruction navale, appelé HMCS Cornwallis, qui venait d'être créé.

C'est le 1er mai 1942 que le Cornwallis devint un sous-commandement de l'instruction pour la marine. Ses nombreux quartiers, bureaux et écoles étaient disséminés un peu partout. Comme le rôle opérationnel de la marine prenait rapidement de l'importance dans la région de Halifax et que l'espace était restreint, il fallut déménager le centre d'instruction. Avec la rapidité qui caractérise les opérations en temps de guerre, le site de Deep Brook fut choisi et acheté et les travaux de construction débutèrent dès la fin de juin 1942. Le transfert officiel de Halifax à Cornwallis eut lieu le 14 avril 1943. Le coût final de la construction, à l'exclusion de l'équipement, s'éleva à près de $9 000 000.

En quelques mois, la calme propriété campagnarde était devenue la plus importante base d'instruction navale de recrues du Commonwealth britannique et de loin la plus grande ville de la région avec plus de 11 000 militaires en période de pointe, personnel et stagiaires compris. Des milliers de jeunes Canadiens et Canadiennes ont été initiés ici à la vie militaire et il n'est pas rare de voir par une journée d'été un voyageur aux cheveux grisonnants s'arrêter à la barrière et demander la permission d'emprunter une fois encore les avenues et de longer les édifices dont il se souvient avec tant de nostalgie.

À la fin de la guerre en 1945, la base devint un centre temporaire de démobilisation d'où le personnel de la marine retournait à la vie civile. Ainsi, pour nombre de Canadiens, Cornwallis a été le premier et le dernier contact qu'ils auront eu avec la marine. En 1946, la période de transition prit fin et le 28 février, moins de quatre ans après le début des travaux de construction, la base fut déclarée excédentaire; la marine was the hospital, operated by the Department of Veteran's Affairs.

Unfortunately, the world political climate did not permit Canada to relax her vigilance and the threat of further war was soon again on the horizon. In June 1948 a "stop sale" order was issued on HMCS Cornwallis and in September the Navy was again in possession of the Base. Training began at a modest pace, with a projected average recruit population of 800 in a five month new entry course. The Korean conflict brought new demands on the Navy and by 1951 Cornwallis was training twice the number originally planned. 1951 also saw the beginning of the first Regular Force female training at Cornwallis at a rate of 250-300 Wrens per year.

UNIFICATION

With the unification of the Canadian Armed Forces HMCS Cornwallis was redesignated CFB Cornwallis on 1 April 1966. Basic training for Air-women recruits began at Cornwallis in January 1967 and integrated female training in May 1968. That year also saw the beginning of integrated male training.

With the lengthening of Recruit Training to include fieldcraft training, a 3000 acre site that also accommodates a firing range was acquired at Granville Ferry on the far side of the Annapolis Basin. That site, together with the 615 acre estate originally purchased make up today's Canadian Forces English language recruit training base. Training context and methods, equipment and facilities, organizations, staff and uniforms have seen many changes and undoubtedly will see more in future, but the role of the Base remains constant: to provide sound basic military training for Canada's Armed Forces.

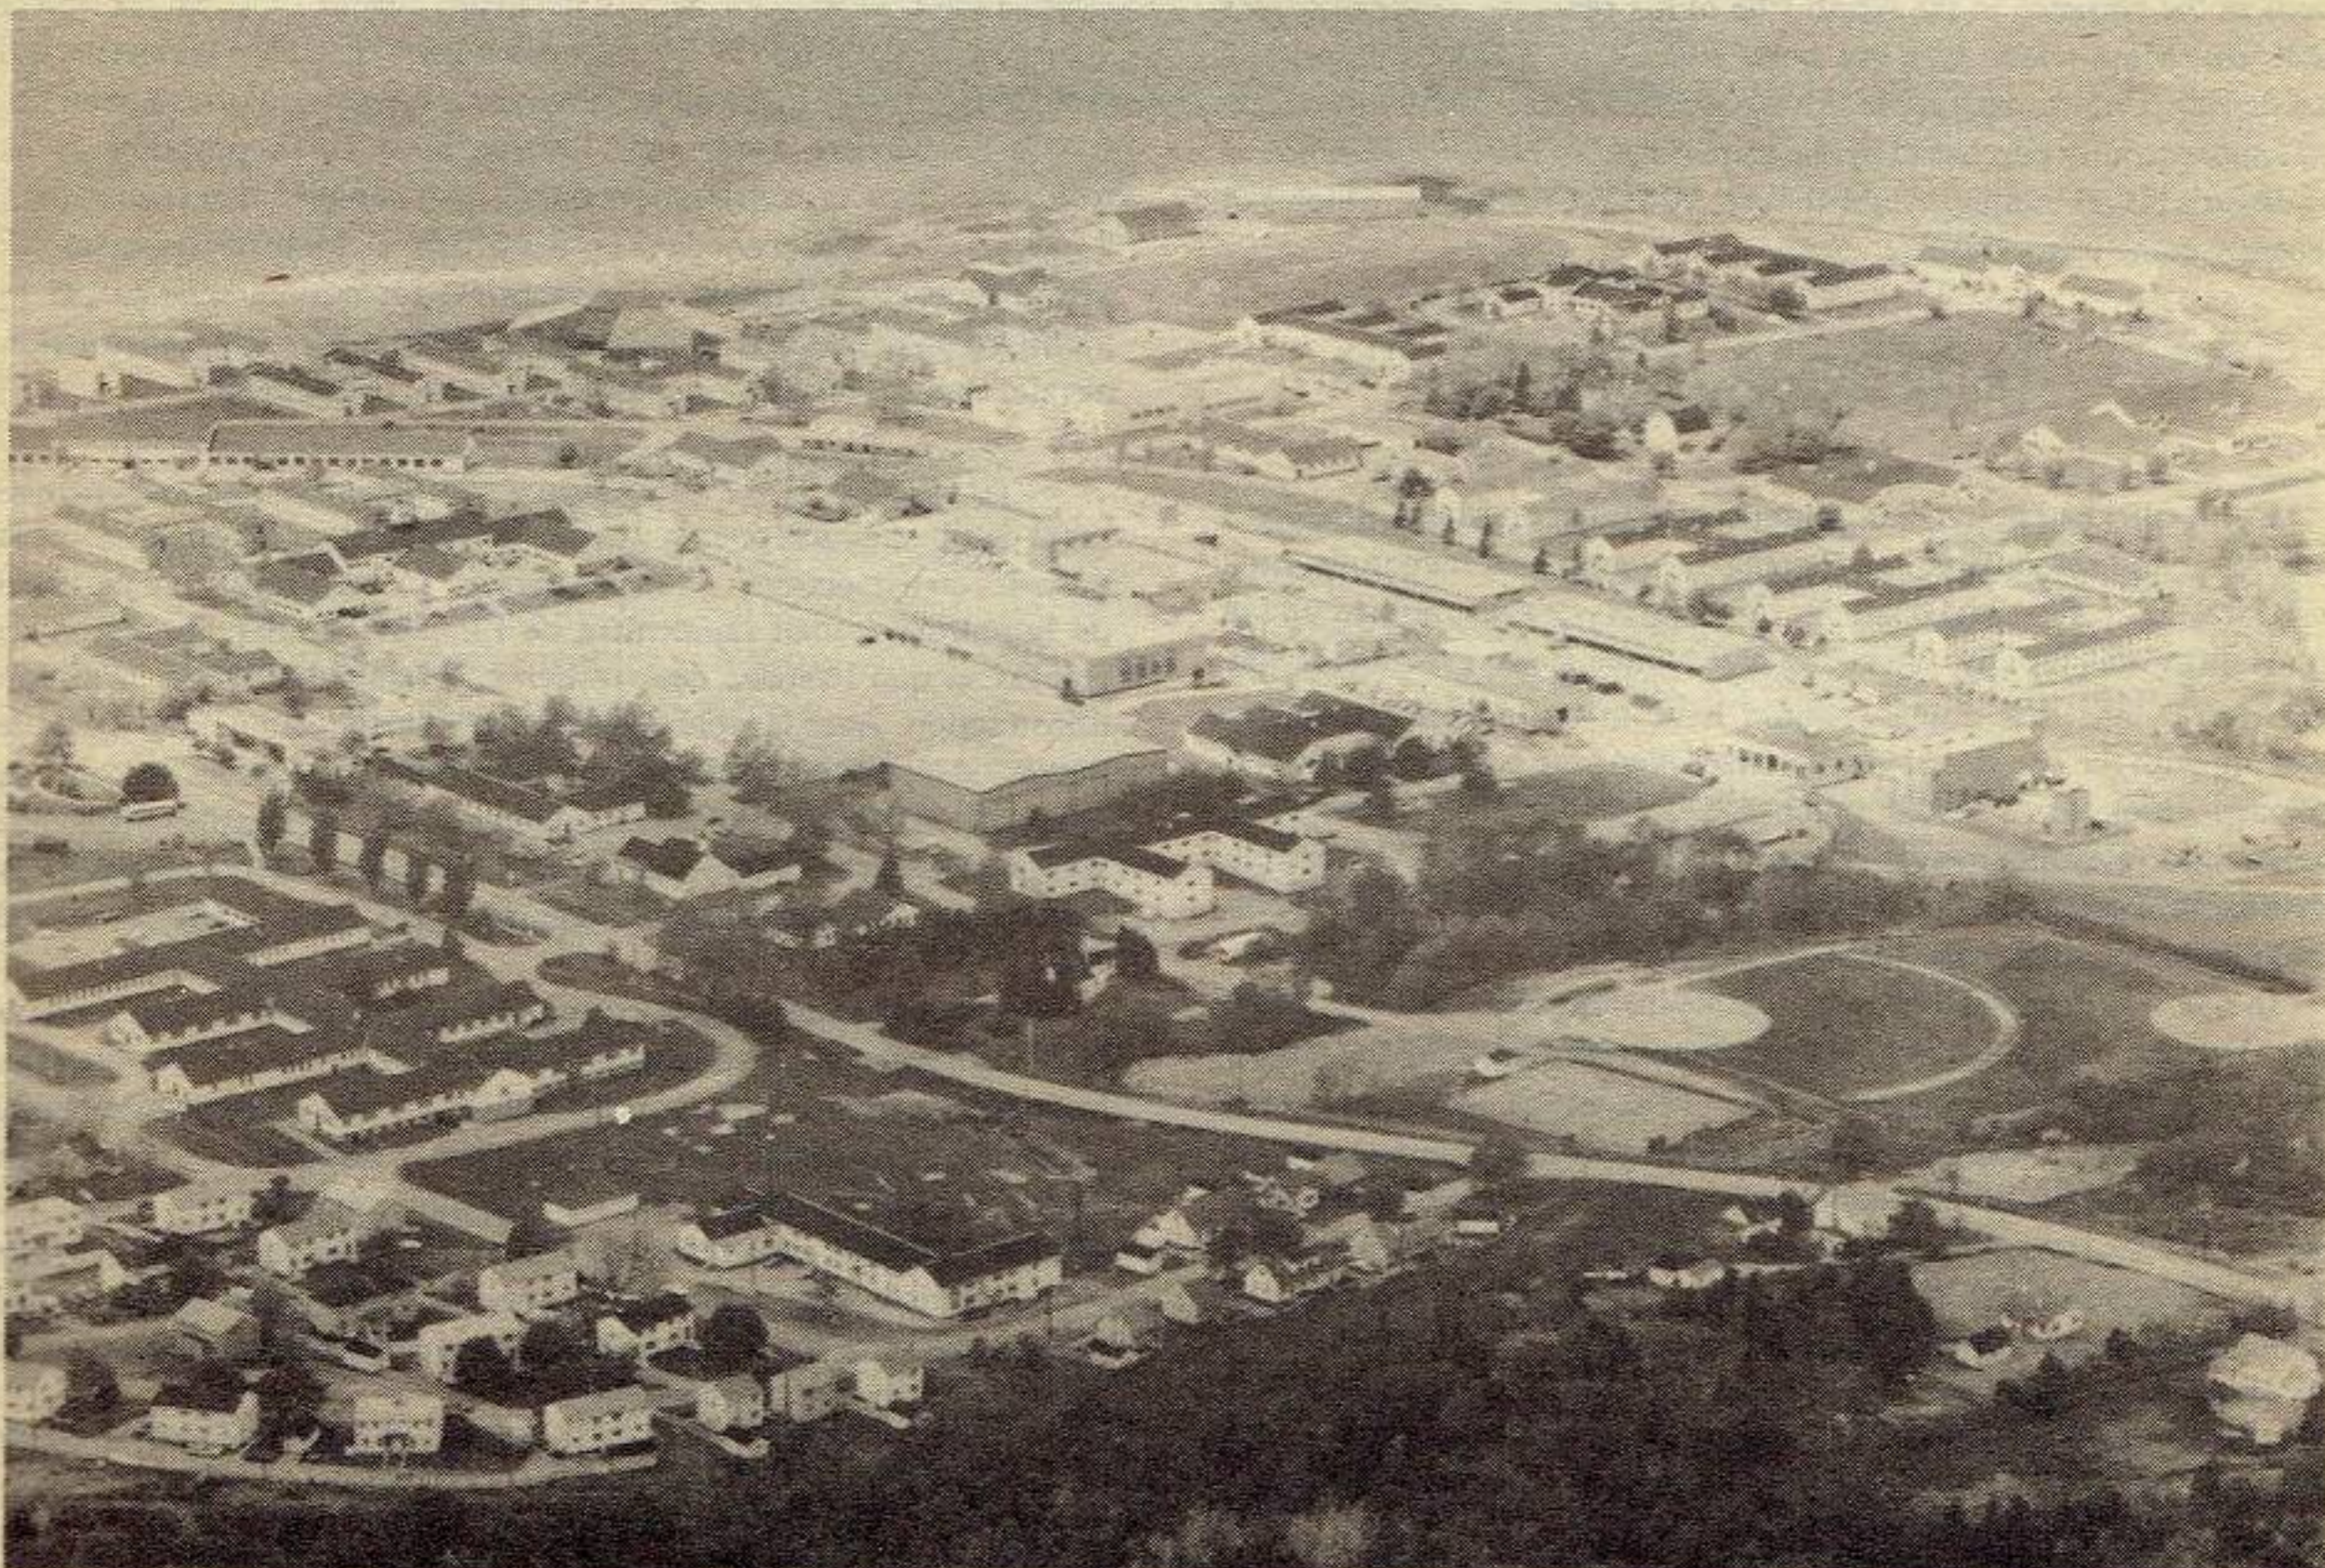

réglait ses dettes et la Corporation des biens de guerre fut chargée de vendre la base. La seule installation qui demeura en service fut l'hôpital exploité par le ministère des Affaires des anciens combattants.

Malheureusement, le climat politique mondial ne permit pas au Canada de relâcher sa vigilance, et la menace d'une autre guerre commençait de nouveau à poindre à l'horizon. En juin 1948, Cornwallis était frappé d'un ordre "d'arrêt de vente" et en septembre, la marine était de nouveau propriétaire de la base. L'instruction commença à un rythme modéré, le nombre moyen de recrues prévu étant de 800 pour un cours de cinq mois. Le conflit de Corée eut pour effet de mettre davantage la marine à contribution et dès 1951, Cornwallis formait deux fois plus de recrues que le nombre prévu à l'origine. Cette année marqua aussi le début de l'instruction dispensée aux femmes dans la Force régulière, au rythme de 250 à 300 recrues de la marine par année.

L'UNIFICATION

À la faveur de l'unification des Forces armées canadiennes, Cornwallis fut rebaptisé BFC Cornwallis le 1er avril 1966. L'instruction de l'élément Air commença à Cornwallis en janvier 1967 et l'instruction fut offerte aux femmes et aux hommes des trois armes à partir de mai 1968.

L'élargissement du programme d'instruction des recrues, qui englobait désormais les manoeuvres en campagne, a nécessité l'achat d'un terrain de 3000 acres à Granville Ferry, de l'autre côté du bassin de l'Annapolis, sur lequel on aussi aménagé un champ de tir. Ce site et la propriété de 615 acres achetée au début constituent aujourd'hui la base d'instruction des recrues de langue anglaise des Forces canadiennes. Le cadre et les méthodes d'instruction, l'équipement, les installations, l'organisation, le personnel et les uniformes ont connu de nombreux changements et en connaîtront sûrement d'autres, mais le rôle de la base demeure le même: fournir une solide instruction militaire de base aux Forces armées canadiennes.

CANADIAN FORCES RECRUIT SCHOOL

Integrated Recruit Training was established at CFB Cornwallis on May 6, 1968. The first course was composed of personnel from the Sea and Air elements; Land element recruit training started in August 1968. All English-speaking male and female recruits do their basic training at Cornwallis with an average of 1000 recruits on the Base at any one time. All French-speaking recruits are trained at CFB St. Jean, near Montreal, Quebec.

CFRS Cornwallis is truly a CF School. It draws personnel from all elements and trades to perform the duties of recruit instructor. A staff of 180 personnel from 45 military occupation classification are presently posted to CFRS.

ÉCOLE DES RECRUES DES FORCES CANADIENNES

L'instruction intégrée des recrues a débuté à la BFC Cornwallis le 6 mai 1968. Le premier cours a été dispensé aux recrues des éléments Mer et Air; l'instruction des recrues de l'élément Terre a commencé en août 1968. Toutes les recrues féminines et masculines de langue anglaise reçoivent leur instruction élémentaire à la base, la moyenne étant de 1000 recrues à la fois. Toutes les recrues francophones reçoivent leur instruction à la BFC St-Jean, près de Montréal (Québec).

L'ERFC est vraiment une école des FC. Le personnel d'instruction de l'ERFC recruté dans trois éléments, compte actuellement 180 personnes provenant de 45 catégories d'emploi militaire.

AREA ATTRACTIONS

Cornwallis is situated on the shores of the Annapolis River Basin which constitutes the western end of the Annapolis Valley. The entire area is well known as one of the major tourist regions of Nova Scotia. It is an outdoor paradise for fishing, hunting, canoeing, hiking, cross-country skiing and generally communing with nature. Local artisans and craftsmen ply their trades and sell their wares in most of the surrounding communities.

Kejimkujik National Park is within 50 miles of the Base and features facilities for camping, canoeing, fishing and an extensive network of hiking trails. Just five miles from the Base in Clementsport is a Provincial Wildlife Park displaying a variety of wild animals native to the area. Several Provincial and municipal camping and picnic parks are also located within easy access.

BEAR RIVER

A pleasant 10 minute drive from the Base is the charming "little Switzerland" of Nova Scotia, Bear River, where a thriving artistic and crafts centre exists. Hand-made items are sold in the cooperative store and there's also a costume rental shop that houses one of the finest costume museums in the country.

Cette région est l'une des plus importantes de la Nouvelle-Écosse sur le plan touristique. C'est un paradis pour les pêcheurs, les chasseurs, les canoéistes, les randonneurs, les skieurs de fond et les amateurs de la nature. Des artisans locaux s'adonnent à leur art et en vendent les produits dans la plupart des collectivités environnantes.

Le parc national de Kejimkujik est situé à 50 milles de la base; on peut y pratiquer le camping, le canotage, la pêche et la randonnée dans de nombreux sentiers. À cinq milles à peine de la base, le parc provincial de la faune sauvage de Clementsport héberge une variété d'animaux sauvages typiques à la région. Plusieurs campings et aires de pique-nique provinciaux et municipaux sont aussi situés à courte distance.

BEAR RIVER

Le village de Bear River, aussi appelé la "Suisse miniature", est un centre florissant d'artisanat.

Canada's first architect, Samuel de Champlain, had the 1605 Port Royal fur trading settlement built around a courtyard like the Normand farms back in France. Now reconstructed the Habitation occupies its original river site and recreates Canada's oldest settlement.

Samuel de Champlain, le premier architecte de Normandie, construisit le poste de la traite des fourrures de Port Royal en 1605. Présentement une reconstruction de l'habitation se trouve sur le site original, recréant le plus vieux établissement au Canada.
